Darryl Jackson is a partner in the Washington, D.C. office of Kelley Drye & Warren LLP. His practice focuses on export controls, antiboycott and sanctions-related matters. His practice also focuses on white collar criminal defense and complex civil litigation, and includes conducting internal investigations and advising clients on Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA) matters. Mr. Jackson previously served as the assistant secretary of commerce for export enforcement at the Department of Commerce's Bureau of Industry and Security (BIS).

In the export controls, antiboycott and sanctions arenas, Mr. Jackson concentrates on compliance and enforcement defense. He establishes and audits clients' corporate compliance programs to help companies and executives operate in accordance with the complex and evolving regulatory landscape. As the government's export control enforcement and prosecution efforts continue to intensify, and with greater consequences, Mr. Jackson defends corporations and individuals facing civil administrative actions and criminal indictments.

As the assistant secretary of commerce for export enforcement at the Department of Commerce's Bureau of Industry and Security, Mr. Jackson served as the nation's leading federal official responsible for the enforcement of the laws and regulations governing the export of dual-use goods and technology, as well as the antiboycott laws. He was confirmed by the U.S. Senate on October 7, 2005, after being nominated for this post by President George W. Bush.

As assistant secretary, Mr. Jackson was responsible for protecting and advancing the national security, foreign policy and economic interests of the United States. He was also responsible for developing and implementing export enforcement policy at BIS. In addition to managing the enforcement staff at the Commerce Department's headquarters in Washington, D.C., he oversaw nine field offices located throughout the United States, as well as five overseas attaches stationed in Moscow, New Delhi, Beijing, Hong Kong and Abu Dhabi.

During his tenure as assistant secretary, Mr. Jackson authorized the charges and settlements in all BIS export enforcement and antiboycott civil administrative cases and coordinated the criminal prosecution of BIS's export controls cases with U.S. Attorneys nationwide. Mr. Jackson worked with the DOJ's National Security Division to develop and implement its Export Enforcement Initiative, which was launched in 2007 and resulted in a significant increase in export controls criminal prosecutions. He also developed the principles that BIS applies in its civil administrative cases to determine whether export controls compliance programs are effective. In addition, following the enactment of the International Emergency Economic Powers Enhancement Act by Congress in 2007, which provides significantly higher penalties for export violations, Mr. Jackson developed the charging and penalty policies that BIS now applies in its administrative cases. Under Mr. Jackson's leadership, BIS's Office of Export Enforcement investigations resulted in a number of significant criminal and administrative cases.

As assistant secretary, Mr. Jackson also led the U.S.-Hong Kong Bilateral Export Controls Discussions, as well as the first and second BIS-Singapore Customs Bilateral Export Controls Discussions.

Mr. Jackson also previously served for more than a decade as a federal prosecutor in the U.S. Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia, the largest U.S. Attorney's Office in the nation. He tried a broad array of criminal jury trials and subsequently rose through the supervisory ranks to become third in command of the Office as executive assistant U.S. Attorney for operations.
